

On Sunday night—or rather about four o'clock Monday morning—the house of ALOIS GRUBER, near TURN'S Hotel, was discovered to be on fire. Very prompt and very energetic work saved this building also, although much injured by the flames. In the latter case the fire originated or was set in an unfrequented part of the house, and it could not possibly have been accidental.—Suspicion attached to a son-in-law of GRUBER's, who, it is said, had made threats of burning the house, and his arrest is determined upon. "Liberty" evidently needs a little "death" before a purely healthy state of affairs can exist there.
