October 2019

GOAL

This guide will teach you:
• Important vocabulary related to death records.
• How to read a Russian Orthodox columnar death entry.
• How to read a Russian language death record for a person in the Russian partition of Poland.

INTRODUCTION

You may want to consult the following “How to” Guides before continuing:
• Cyrillic Alphabet
• Cyrillic Script
• Reading Russian Documents: The Alphabet
• Reading Russian Documents: Deciphering the Handwriting and Understanding the Grammar

The table below reflects important vocabulary that you may find in death records.

Place Names and Jurisdictions

The Russian Empire consisted of jurisdictions called guberni (singular form: gubernia), oblasti (singular form: oblast), uyezdi (singular form: uyezd) and okruga (singular form: okrug). The European, or Western Russian Empire, was divided into guberni, or states. The guberni were then further subdivided into smaller districts or counties called uyezdi. The Caucasus, Central Asia and Far East areas were also divided into states called oblasti, and counties known as okruga. There are several variations for the word village or town, as illustrated in the table below.

HOW TO

Beginning in 1722, Russian Orthodox churches were required to keep a record of birth, marriage and death records. There was no standardization until 1806, when a printed form was established. In 1838, the form was revised slightly and remained in use until the time of the Russian Revolution in 1917/1918.3 This guide will teach you how to read the form used between 1838 and 1917/1918.

Orthodox Church books are often organized by year and subcategorized by record type – birth, marriage and death. Cover pages mark the separation of birth, marriage, and death records. To the left is an example of a cover page for death records. The year may be written on the cover page for death records, or it may be written in the preceding section, in this case, births.

Although this and the headings found within the church books will be written in Church Slavonic, you do NOT need to know how to read Church Slavonic to read an Orthodox death record. Translations of column headings are provided for you below, and the entries will be written in handwritten Cyrillic script.

Column Headings

The number column is the \( x \)\textsuperscript{th} death in that year. The gender will be found in the corresponding column.

In the date column, if you do not find the month written above the numeric date, check the entries above. The name of the month may be written at the top of the page, or at the beginning of a new month.

The column containing information about the deceased generally consists of the following format:

Location, standing (if female, information about husband/father will be provided including the father/husband/s standing, name and relationship), name of the deceased.
